I am proud to support the WholeHealthED initiative, as I believe it is a crucial component to providing our youth with a well-rounded understanding of health and wellness, and provides them with the tools necessary to incorporate that knowledge into their lives as they become adults. I believe that these tools are vital to the future of our nation, both for the physical health of future generations, but also for the health of our families and communities. If these tools are developed early on in life, they will simply become second nature, a foundational element of who that person is.

As a society, we are not putting our children and youth in the best position possible for their future and long-term success, and as a result, we are failing them. The notion that it takes a village to raise a child has never been more true. It takes a nation to raise a generation. We must all – elected officials, business, non-profit, community organizations, schools and families – work together to raise awareness and to instill a knowledge and understanding through sustained learning in school, and at home.

I welcome the WholeHealthEd initiative to South Jersey and am proud to support it in any way that I can. Together, we can ensure that in today's America, the next generation will have it better than the previous. They can, with our help, fulfill the American dream.

Sincerely,

Jeff Van Drew
